

one day AT Leotv ...

Jennifer: What? No! We're not Ready!
Martin! What are you doing? Cut camera!
Cut camera!

Martin: Ha! Take it Jen Jen!

Jennifer: I hope you get a painful wart
on your personal data port, Martin ...

Jennifer: On our last "CyberCrime" we looked into the torrid love affair between our own ...

Jennifer: ... chat room girl, Robyn ...

Jennifer: ... and the mysterious cowboy known only as "the Bandit."

Jennifer: Tonight we turn our attention to her early years ...

Edith: When the rocket ship came out of the sky we just knew that we were going to be blessed with something special ...

Edith: ... I mean after Mike and Gloria and little Joey left for California it was just me and Archie and well, you know that Archie and I were just too old to have more babies. Especially on account of the war wound that knocked out his plumbing, if you know what I mean ...

Archie: Jeeeee Louise you dingbat, I told you not to talk about my plumbing on the national TV!

Edith: But Archie, this nice lady wants to know the truth. Little Robyn was the blessing from God that not even the army could bring back to you ...
Archie: Enough of that Edith! I knew that kid was nothing but trouble!

Jennifer: Adopted by the Bunkers, little Robyn struggled to fit in ...

Rabbi Joe: Well, I guess she was age six or seven when the Bunkers brought Robyn into our synagogue. They claimed to have adopted her but since they couldn't understand the language she spoke in, of course, as with most sitcoms of the 70's who needed a "theme" of the week as a plot device, they assumed she was of the Jewish faith ...

Rabbi Joe: Quite obviously, I didn't believe Mrs. Bunker's story that little Robyn fell from the sky in a rocket ship. While Mrs. Bunker was sincere, I was troubled by the fact that Mr. Bunker was prone to kissing Sammy Davis Jr. and others on national television. There was something definitely odd about the whole situation ...

Rabbi Joe: Unfortunately, child services being what they were in the seventies and early eighties, we had no grounds to intervene and take the child from the Bunkers. I only hope that she found a way to fit in with such oppressive adoptive parents ...

Jennifer: Medical tests revealed that little Robyn was not of this Earth. This fact is demonstrated in this recently revealed, poorly-spliced together, and badly reenacted, home movie ...

Robyn: 0110000010000100111011101.
000100010001000100010001. 000000010101.

Robyn: 0111010101!

Archie: Hey you little Dingbat, get down from there!

Robyn: 00001000001110101010001!

Archie: Yah yah yah. When you're done shooting them laser thingies out of your eyes, fly up and clean the gutters! It's time you earned your keep!

Edith: Robyn, Robyn, please shut down this force field and let Auntie Edith in ...

Robyn: 00001000010000010000.

Edith: Now now baby, no more crying. Uncle Archie is just a little grumpy on account of his plumbing being all messed up by the army and all. I think you being seven and all, you should know that men have needs, and when those needs aren't met they get to be a little strange like your Uncle Archie. It was like the time St. Paul was in the desert and ...

Robyn: 010010000001010101?!?!?!?

Robyn: 0111010101?

Archie: Yah kid, you're not that bad. Now put your eye beams away before you scare your Auntie Edith.

Jennifer: Shocking.

Jennifer: If you've forgotten, with the "Leo rules the world" storyline taking over this strip, Robyn is still on the run with the man only known as "the Bandit." We will update this story as it develops ...

Jennifer: Now, on our next CyberCrime, we'll look at the mysterious circumstances behind the disappearance of TechLive's own Scott Herriott. Was he abducted by his bigfoot lover? Or was it something more sinister? And, more importantly, do we want him back? Tune in next time!

We'll be right back ...
