

RELIVING THOSE DAYS AT TECHTV ...

Voice Over: Sent backwards in time, our savior ... here ... favorite fat guy in a really obnoxious purple outfit ...

Voice Over: ... Leo Laporte, is about to get some bad news.

Carmine: If our sensors are correct, Ieo, your brain from 2004 has been transported into your body from 2001. This could be very very bad.

Leo: Bad? How could that be bad?

Carmine: Well, if you were to be trapped in the past with knowledge of the future you could run afoul of the laws of time.

Leo: Laws of time?

Carmine: You know, the old adage that if you were trapped in the past, knowing what you know now, and screwed something up you could negate your whole future. But ...

Leo: But ...?

Carmine: But my theory has always been is that if you were to go to the past like that you've simply created an alternate reality. It wouldn't be your future you've screwed up, it would be the future of the Leo you've traded places with.

Leo: How would we know if your theory is correct?
Carmine: Time fluxes. Things that shouldn't be.
Leo: Like Tilde suddenly sporting twin Double 48d's and claiming to be some sort of "adult novelty android?"

Carmine: Yes! Exactly! That would be a sign that your very presence here would be messing with reality. This reality might be changed or corrupted by you being here. This could mean very bad things for all involved.

Leo: But I'd be ...?

Carmine: Safe. If you're from an alternate reality, you'd probably pop right back there if something were to go wrong. But the rest of us ... oh lordy.

Leo: What?

Carmine: Any action you take to change the future might put an end to life as we know it for parallel you and the rest of us. Again, you'd be safe, but the rest of us would be "so screwed," as the kids say these days.

Leo: Works for me!
